

Coffee spills everywhere. All over you.
All over the floor. All over your laptop.

"Tis a sweltering, dark and stormy summer evening in July. You are a hard working indie podcaster, coming up on a deadline, editing furiously on your You work a day job: evenings and weekends are the only time you have to work on your show.

To get through the next couple of hours, you

A cup of coffee is definitely in order. You walk to the kitchen and prepare 16 ounces of hot, caffeine-infused, liquid life. You walk the cup over to your desk, and as you are setting it down, are jolted by the sound of a very close bolt of lightning! The hot liquid jumps out, searing your poor hand, which has now let go of said cup in an involuntary act of self-preservation.

If you decide to brew a cup and bring it over to your desk (you are on a deadline, after all)
